Embroidery -- The New Era {#Sec18} The embroidery workflow has changed significantly over the past 10 years. Originally, embroidery was primarily used as a way to print an image on fabric and to sew. Today, it is much more powerful as a way of adding to an image and embedding a digital file directly into the design. The initial cost of an embroidery machine is very high. Small embroidery companies can still get away with a less expensive (and cheaper) sewing machine, but most high-end embroidery machines can cost over $20,000, which is beyond what most small companies can afford. The cost of operating a small business is also a consideration when deciding what machine to purchase. Most embroidery companies do not pay an hourly wage for their employees, so one of the first decisions is which embroidery software to use. It used to be that the only software capable of high-end embroidery was Embroidermod 3 and IDt Embroidery. Embroidermod 4 and 5 are also good embroidery software, but are more difficult to learn to use. Another consideration is the time it takes to produce an embroidery order. Initially, embroidery was very labor-intensive to produce, and often took 4--6 weeks to complete. Many companies offer an expedited service, where orders can be completed in 1--2 weeks instead of 4--6 weeks. The cost of the embroidery service is also significant. Embroidery is a labor-intensive business, and many embroidery companies charge at least $20 per order (even higher prices can be found with larger companies). Considering that this is a service-based business, the cost of the embroidery service can be significant. Small companies that are looking to incorporate embroidery into their services will have to consider their overall operation to see if it makes sense to invest in an embroidery machine.
